

Blae Tarn

PENTAX K-5 II s, 50.0 mm, 1/25 sec, ISO 80 | SMC Pentax-M 50mm F1.7 | CC-BY-NC-ND-4.0

Blae Tarn is a small, quiet, and rather nice little lake in the Lake District. There are two small issues with it though. The road we took is called "Hardknot Pass" which, unexpectedly, starts with a massive warning sign of the coming 31% (sic!) slopes. In short, the road is brutal, and I would recommend avoiding it for anyone without experience of driving on serious mountain roads.

The other surprise with Blae Tarn is that the parking lot costs a surprisingly large sum, something along the lines of £5 for 2 hours. That is without having any facilities on site, and cash only.

Overall: it's a nice place, but certainly not a must.

coordinates: 54.429, -3.093

Created by Peter Molnar <mail@petermolnar.net>, published at 2021-09-25 09:00 UTC+01:00, last modified at 2021-10-31 15:57 UTC , to canonical URL <https://petermolnar.net/photo/blae-tarn/> , licensed under CC-BY-NC-ND-4.0 .